Tucked atop one of Hollywood’s newest luxury residential buildings is an eye-popping secret: a dramatic two-story penthouse liberally wallpapered—from floor to ceiling—with the graphic handsketched floral drawings of Japanese artist Kahori Maki. Curated by celebrated Los Angeles-based designer Gulla Jónsdóttir (who also selected furniture and artwork for the building’s amenity spaces), the suite is a nod to the “Instagram museums” that have gained popularity across U.S. cities. Available to rent for events, photo shoots or content curation, it’s meant to serve as an experiential creative space where artistic expression and interior design intersect. And let’s face it, it’s a total wow.
